Collaborative Divorce

Collaborative Law provides an alternative to the traditional divorce litigation process. It provides a team of professionals who are trained to work with a couple to craft their own outcome.

A collaborative divorce consists of a team comprised of attorneys, financial neutrals, mental health professionals, divorce coaches, and child specialists. Each professional is required to complete Collaborative Law training to participate in this practice.

For example, a financial neutral is hired to create a detailed analysis of the parties' current financial situation while aiding in generating options for their financial future.

Coaches often work with the couple to manage emotions and expectations while assisting in crafting a well-thought parenting agreement.

Attorneys work with the team to reach a consensus efficiently and effectively resulting in a plan the couple crafted rather than an outcome imposed by the Court.
